

From the Farm to Ft. Washington Ave.

A farmers' market has set up shop at NewYork-Presbyterian/Columbia with offerings that include everything from seasonal produce to cheeses and baked goods.

At a July 6 opening celebration of the market, which is located on Fort Washington Avenue north of 168th Street, Dr. Pardes explained that, more than making delicious food available, the new market represents a commitment to the health of the community.

Alongside programs like CHALK (Choosing Healthy & Active Lifestyles for Kids), Healthy Schools Healthy Families and the Live Your Life campaign, the market will promote healthy eating and help fight obesity. At the same time, he said, it will help improve the environment by reducing carbon emissions through promoting foods originating within the state.

City Council Speaker Christine C. Quinn praised NewYork-Presbyterian and Columbia University for their commitment to Northern Manhattan and efforts to make it an "even more fabulous and healthy neighborhood." The new farmers' market is one of 51 in five boroughs, and among the 40 that accept food stamps and Electronic Benefit Transfer (EBT) cards that transfer government benefits to retailers — something the Council Speaker said will help fight hunger and obesity.

Manhattan Borough President Scott Stringer called the farmers' market an "amazing collaborative effort" between the Hospital, university, community and government.

The farmers' market is open every Tuesday through November from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. To encourage its use, patients, employees and local residents will receive "Green Bucks" that can be used to purchase fruits and vegetables. The farmers' market is managed by Greenmarket, which operates similar markets throughout New York City. ■

NewYork-Presbyterian Hospital has always been committed to delivering the highest quality, most compassionate care and service to our patients and their families. They are, and will continue to be, our first priority. This means that it is absolutely critical that we ensure our continued financial strength in order to make sure that the best resources are available to meet their needs.

Since the Hospital's merger over a decade ago, our efforts to manage expenses, attract the best physicians and staff, and create innovative clinical programs to bring in new patients, have positioned us very well financially. We have grown our workforce by approximately 40% to 19,000 and have invested significantly in care at the bedside. During the past two years, however, all business sectors have been affected by the nation's turbulent economic times, and health care organizations, particularly those in New York, continue to be hit with steep and ongoing Federal and State budget cuts. We have monitored our operating budget closely and adjusted it as needed by reducing non-personnel-related expenses and vacant positions. As a result of this proactive approach, NYP continues to remain financially strong. In the last few weeks, we have had to once again be proactive and reduce expenses. This time, in order to realize the necessary reductions, we had to restructure some functions, which unfortunately, resulted in the elimination of 200 full-time positions. Most of these positions were already vacant; however, regrettably we had to eliminate some filled positions and 36 of our employees had to leave their jobs at the Hospital. The Hospital is committed to helping these staff and we will work closely with them to provide transitional support and career guidance.

We understand how difficult this is for everybody. It was not an easy process but a necessary one to enable the Hospital to continue providing the safest, highest quality care and service to our patients and their families. We appreciate everyone's support during these trying times, and are confident that NYP will continue to thrive as one of the nation's top academic medical centers.

a night to remember

Glorious gowns and crisp tuxedos, professionally styled hair and makeup, a white stretch limo for photo ops — these things spelled P-R-O-M for the 40 teenagers who attended the Moonlight Masquerade at the Morgan Stanley Children's Hospital on May 15.

Outpatients, inpatients and former patients who have dealt with chronic and life-threatening illnesses walked a red carpet into the Hospital's Wintergarden, which was transformed into a ballroom for the night with a deejay, hors d'oeuvres, and a three-course sit-down dinner. To top it all off, Michael "Big Mike" Lynche, an American Idol finalist, stopped by to perform and add a touch of celebrity sparkle to an already glittering evening.

"It's nice," said Johendy Peralta, 13, a former patient. "I couldn't go to the prom in regular school because I was in the Hospital, so tonight I could make up for what I missed."

What she enjoyed the most, Johendy said, was "getting all ready — makeup, hair, jewelry, everything."

While a stylist did the hair of 16-year-old Katie Mascher, who underwent a heart transplant in 1994 at the age of 5 ½ months, her mother, Alice Mascher, said, "We came back just to have fun — we're not here for a procedure, there are no needles. It's a very special occasion."

Makeup artists from Bobbi Brown Cosmetics and hairstylists from the Frederic Fekkai salon prepared the prom-goers for their big night, and J.P. Morgan Chase, Bloomingdale's and anonymous donors provided gowns and tuxedos.

The Hospital's Children's Helping Advisory Team (C.H.A.T.), a group of teen patients aged 12 to 17 who volunteer their time to make the Hospital as pleasant as possible, planned and organized each detail of the prom. They even held a food tasting before planning the prom dinner menu.

Willa Austen Isikoff, 17, a co-chair of C.H.A.T., said, "The best part of the prom is seeing inpatients step away from the hospital setting and have a fun night. They get to do what other kids do." ■

how does our garden grow?

In support of the Hospital's Strategic Initiative of Advancing Care, senior administration has announced plans to significantly expand and enhance Radiation Oncology services at the Herbert Irving Comprehensive Cancer Center at the NYP/Columbia campus. The centerpiece of the project is a new facility that will offer patients state-of-the-art treatment in a patient-friendly environment. The space is being created under the Garden Courtyard on Fort Washington Avenue, and is scheduled to open in the summer of 2012.

Building this new underground space entails extensive excavation and construction activities in the Garden Courtyard in the months and years ahead. Unfortunately, this necessitates closure of the Garden space and the removal of several trees. Upon completion of construction, the Garden area will be reconfigured and improved for staff, patients and visitors. This will include adding new, mature trees and enhanced seating areas, and the construction of new walkways.

"While we are excited about this new facility, we recognize that this marks the beginning of a challenging period for staff, patients and visitors," says Robert Kelly, M.D., Group Senior Vice President, Chief Operating Officer and Chief Medical Officer for NYP/Columbia. "We will make every effort to protect the safety of our patients, visitors and staff."

The Hospital will keep employees updated on the progress of the building project by posting information on the Infonet, and in future issues of NYPress. If at any time you have questions or concerns, you may contact Juan Mejia at (212) 305-5271 or jmm9007@nyp.org. ■

making strides for autism

Staff members from NYP's Westchester, Weill Cornell and Columbia campuses and their family members joined thousands of other New York and Connecticut residents for the ninth annual "Walk Now for Autism Speaks," held June 6 at Manhattanville College in Westchester County, New York.

"We were thrilled to see such participation and enthusiasm from so many of our staff," says Linda Espinosa, Vice President, Patient Care Services, NYP/Westchester.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the neurological disorder now affects one in every 110 children and one in every 70 boys.

The walk raised nearly $800,000, which will fund biomedical research, advocacy, awareness and family services for autism.

John Vecchiolla

Walk Now for Autism Speaks was an intergenerational affair.

John Vecchiolla

Lisa Mainieri, Manager, Cardiac and Vascular Service Lines, devised a way to represent both the Vivian and Seymour Milstein Family Heart Center and the Ronald O. Perelman Heart Institute at the AHA walk.

coming and going for heart health

The American Heart Association points out that by participating in its Start! Wall Street Run & Heart Walk, you are taking a step toward regular physical activity, which can lower your risk of heart disease and stroke. And, in the process, you can also raise funds to fight cardiac disease, which claims nearly a million lives annually.

NYP employees took this message seriously and turned out more than 200-strong for this year's event, which took place on June 24 in New York's Financial District. Hospital walkers and runners raised over $40,000.

Staff of NYP/Weill Cornell's Ronald O. Perelman Heart Institute and NYP/Columbia's Vivian and Seymour Milstein Family Heart Center were among the more than 10,000 people who took part in the Start! Wall Street Run & Heart Walk, which the American Heart Association produces in partnership with the New York Road Runners.

Before and after the race, free health screenings, nutrition and fitness information, and resources on heart disease and stroke were made available to participants.

a penny saved...

By collecting pennies — nearly 50,000 of them — the third-grade class at the Solomon Schechter School of Manhattan was able to donate $470.34 to the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU) of NYP/Weill Cornell's Komansky Center for Children's Health. The NICU will use the funds to purchase developmental toys.

The 20 third-graders collected the money through the annual Penny Harvest, a program through which children aged 4 to 14 collect pennies and turn them into grants for community organizations. The children considered several organizations as potential recipients and, after hearing representatives of each organization explain how the money would be used, chose three, including the NYP/Weill Cornell NICU.

"The Penny Harvest teaches the children the value of philanthropy — that even with small acts they can help others," said Lesley Palmer, the parent of one student.

The students presented their gift to the NICU staff in June during a visit to the Hospital, which was coordinated by Ellen Hawa, Administrative Manager, Patient Services Administration. The students also met with Hospital staff in the Pediatric Library and visited the high-tech command center on Greenberg 1.

Starting at the third-grade level, the Solomon Schechter School of Manhattan incorporates community service and charity work into its curriculum.

Janet Charles

congress on campus

Congresswoman Carolyn B. Maloney (D-NY), visited NYP/Weill Cornell on June 3 to congratulate Dr. Pardes on the success of the Hospital's recent blood drives and to present him with a copy of the remarks of commendation she had inserted in the Congressional Record. With her were representatives of the New York Blood Center, who joined her in presenting Dr. Pardes with a proclamation honoring the hard work of the many individuals who organize and participate in the Hospital's blood drive programs.

Congressman and House Majority Leader Steny H.

Hoyer (D-MD) visited NYP/Columbia on June 8 to tour the new Vivian & Seymour Milstein Family Heart Center and to speak with Dr. Pardes and Dr. Corwin about making health care more affordable for all Americans. Dr. Pardes noted that a strong partnership between the Hospital and federal officials will be key to successfully implementing new federal health reform legislation, and he thanked Congressman Hoyer for taking time to tour the Hospital and see for himself how federal funding is being used to improve the safety and quality of care for our patients.

peer-to-peer honors

At the Society of Practitioners' annual dinner on June 8, three NYP/Columbia physicians were recognized by their peers. Attending Physician Joseph Tenenbaum, M.D., a cardiologist, and Attending Psychiatrist Ralph N. Wharton, M.D., were named Practitioners of the Year.

Special Lecturer Linda D. Lewis, M.D., a neurologist, was awarded the 2010 Alfred M. Markowitz Service Award, which recognizes physicians who take an active interest in promoting the welfare of their colleagues.

recognizing our fab labs

NYP's clinical laboratory staff — pathologists, microbiologists, medical technologists, phlebotomy technicians, clinical laboratory scientists and a variety of other specialists — perform the laboratory tests and procedures that help to diagnose and prevent disease.

These men and women, who play a vital role in every aspect of health care, were celebrated during April 20-26, National Medical Laboratory Professionals Week.

At NYP they perform more than 10.8 million billable procedures each year.

Amelia Pamico

At NYP/Weill Cornell, Lab Managers hosted a reception for their team during a week honoring lab professionals.
